The Completed Story

Pictures say a thousand words and so it is with this Draper backyard transformation. Our seasoned installers met the clients, measured their location and reviewed what they wanted, made suggestions, formulated a reasonable bid based on their customized design and set a date for installation. This process happened during one appointment! Within a couple weeks, the job was installed with precision and punctuality. What a transformation and our client was so happy! (see photos of "before and after"). Their story is one of hundreds that we are proud to claim.

The pictured Pergola comes with a lifetime warranty and is maintenance free. It is one of the more popular design choices that we install year round along with Newport awnings that cover boats, decks and cement patios. Concrete stamping is also an additional service that Awnings Unlimited offers to make our service "One-Stop-Shopping."

At Awnings, no job is impossible. Dream big! With over 29 years of outdoor remodeling successes, we have the resources and ingenuity to make your dream a reality! See what our other clients had to say about Awnings Unlimited below!

Backyard Bonus

Angelyn's Marinade

"This has become a neighborhood favorite. It's great on fish, particularly salmon, and chicken." Original recipe yield: 1 cup.

Ingredients:

1/3 cup soy sauce
2/3 cup white wine
1 tablespoon sesame oil
1 teaspoon minced garlic
1 teaspoon minced fresh ginger root
1/4 cup chopped fresh cilantro

Directions:

In a shallow dish, mix together soy sauce, wine, sesame oil, garlic, ginger and cilantro. Marinate fish or chicken for 1/2 hour or more before grilling.

Preheating the Grill:

The right temperature is always important. Many gas grills come equipped with thermometers, and reliable grill thermometers are widely available. A thermometer will tell you exactly what heat you are working with. That being said, the standard is still the cave-man method. This consists of holding your hand approximately 6 inches above the coals or heat source, about the spot where the food will be cooking, and counting how many seconds you can keep your hand in this position. Count 'one-barbeque, two-barbeque...'

High Heat:	Medium High	Medium	Medium Low	Low Heat:
3 seconds	Heat:	Heat:	Heat:	12 seconds
or 500 F (260 C)	5 seconds	7 seconds	10 seconds	or 300 deg F

Timing Is Everything:

A table of grilling times is of necessity but should be used only as approximates. There are a lot a variables, such as the difference between the 7 seconds Uncle Frank can keep his asbestos hands over the live flames and the 3 seconds your absolutely normal hand measures the same grill at the same time. Of course, a thermometer can measure the heat exactly, but where's the fun in that? There are other variables, less easily tested, that can make two seemingly identical cuts of meat cook at different times - exact thickness, texture, age, and temperature of the raw meat. That being said, timing is everything. There might be only a minute or two between a moist and tender chop and dry, tough shoe leather. So, check for doneness at the approximate time given in the recipe. An instant read thermometer is a good tool. Insert it into the thickest part of the meat, away from the bone, to measure the internal temperature of the food. The most popular method of ascertaining the doneness of the meal is, again, the caveman method. Slice the meat, and observe the color of the juices. If the juices are red, the meat is rare. Pink juices indicate medium rare, and well done meat will have clear juices. Bon appetite!
